Teaching

Teaching is my primary passion and I believe that effective learning is a result of a complex interaction between cognitive, affective and environmental influences. I must provide an intellectually stimulating environment that promotes and nurtures authentic motivations and actions in an environment of trust, supportive exchange and positive progress. My overall goal to emphasize long-term critical thinking and cognitive transfer.

Research and Original Creative Work

I maintain two lines of research. My primary focus is design equity, or the design of built space for impoverished populations such as the homeless and socio-economically challenged. My secondary area of research is interior design teaching and learning.

Service

Interior design is a relatively new distinct profession, and this makes the opportunity for service imperative so that the field continues its healthy trajectory of growth and connection to other fields. My service record shows an ongoing engagement with department, college and university level initiatives, and also significant service to the interior design profession and academic realm at the national level.
